Project Leadership and Organizational Change

Professional Engineers
Ontario

It is staggering that close to 80% of change initiatives end up failing, or falling far short from reaching their goals.

For the most part, this is not because the initiatives represent bad ideas, but rather it is mostly attributed to flawed execution, failure to understand what the change is about, failure to realize the extent of the organizational change and a disconnect between the strategic aspect of the change and the tactical elements that include the project itself, the team involved and the measurement of success.

This course connects change management and project management in a unique manner at 4 different levels:

- Introduction of change management practical concepts.
- Review of leadership attributes for effectively leading change initiatives.
- Establish a connection between the change initiative and project management by ensuring project managers fully understand the impact their projects' products and results will have on the organization.
- Provide project managers with relevant concepts to effectively lead their project within the changing environment.

This offering by Toronto-based Procept Training covers the strategic context and vision that are behind the need for the project and helps participants build a solid thread of reasoning, context, rationale, and continuity. It enables project managers and business leaders to make informed decisions that directly add value to the strategic initiatives and the vision for which the project and the change initiative take place.

Who should attend

This course is designed for project managers, senior project managers, project sponsors, managers of project managers and organizational leaders who are project stakeholders – at any capacity. It is also designed for business directors and vice-presidents, public sector directors and program managers, human resources managers, operations managers and team leads.
